I. PURPOSE

The Institute for Advanced Learning and Research (IALR) hereby invites proposals from qualified companies, organizations, agencies or individuals (“firms” or “offerors”) to provide Research Services, to conduct research and analysis on priority questions to identify strategic areas for increasing social and economic opportunity in micropolitan statistical areas across the country.

II. BACKGROUND

The emerging economic geography that favors large cities has been especially hard on smaller places. In recent years, the American urban-rural economic divide has received extensive discussion and policy debate. Less discussed are the 536 U.S. “micropolitan” regions, home to 27,314,000 people that are struggling to maintain or regain their economic prosperity and vitality. As defined by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), micropolitans are labor market areas with a population of at least 10,000 but fewer than 50,000. These are places too far from metropolitan areas to expect significant economic spillover, but may still have sufficient assets to take advantage of opportunities and serve as regional markets.

Many places have been successful at creating growth in their communities; fewer have been successful at creating more opportunities in their regions for the poor and disadvantaged. If more places can successfully provide opportunities for lower income residents to connect to the growth that is happening in their regions, we should then see measurable community progress where the following are addressed: the social determinants of health, neighborhood revitalization, growth of an entrepreneurial ecosystem, and leadership capacity. This theory of change may be critical if micropolitans are to survive and thrive. Many of these communities have started down the road to reinventing themselves, but still face severe economic headwinds. They have lessons worth sharing and no specific forum in which to do that while learning from others at the same time.

In 2017 and 2018, The Danville Regional Foundation (DRF) hosted The Home of Future Thinking (HOFT) conference in Danville, Virginia (a micropolitan community). The events brought together funders, academics, policy experts and other national “thought leaders” as well as teams of community leaders from nine other invitation-only micropolitan communities across the country, to better understand future trends, share best practices and collectively chart achievable paths to greater prosperity.

A set of questions emerged from the 2017 and 2018 convenings, which are important to answer in order to move the field forward. This project seeks to answer a set of priority questions, identifying strategic areas for increasing social and economic opportunity in micropolitan statistical areas across the country. Findings from the research and analysis will inform the 2019 and 2020 HOFT conferences, and the field more broadly.
III. REQUESTED SERVICES

To address the priority areas of interest, a contractor is sought to provide research and analysis on the following questions to identify strategic areas for increasing social and economic opportunity in micropolitan statistical areas across the country:

1. How are micropolitans trying to increase social and economic opportunity within their boundaries? What kinds of information or data are used to inform these efforts? How are they measuring success? What process measures are being used?
   a. For example, traditional measures include job growth, per capita income, and employment rate. How useful are these in identifying innovative and/or successful micropolitans? Are quality of life measures of equal or greater importance?

2. Micropolitans, along with every community in the U.S., are competing for human capital. How are successful smaller towns attracting and retaining talent? How are they intentionally developing the next generation of leaders and innovators?

3. Economic transformation in distressed communities may require a more holistic approach that addresses income disparity and social determinants of health for families. What kinds of economic growth reduce income inequality? Do these kinds have different impacts on the health and well-being of micropolitan populations?

4. How are successful micropolitans supporting entrepreneurs and providing assistance that leads to new business formation and increased social and economic opportunity? What is needed to increase the readiness of micropolitans to do more of this work? What are the core capacities needed to foster this work (e.g., data, finance, leadership, community engagement), and what is needed to build those capacities?

Scope of work should include the following activities:
1. Refine the questions, with input from the Project Partners (defined in Section IV).
2. Conduct the research and analysis to address each question.
3. Develop a set of briefs that synthesize findings and implications from each question.
4. Discuss findings and implications at the 2019 and 2020 HOFT conferences.

IV. PROJECT PARTNERS

DRF serves as a catalyst for innovation and an agent for transformation. Understanding that significant community change takes time, the Foundation invests for the long term in efforts that promise sustained positive impact in the Dan River Region, including the City of Danville, Pittsylvania County and Caswell County, NC. The Foundation is committed to development, promotion, and support of activities, programs, and organizations that address the health, education, and well-being of the region's residents.
The Institute for Advanced Learning and Research (IALR) serves as a regional catalyst for economic transformation. The IALR mission is accomplished through applied research, advanced learning, economic development, advanced manufacturing, and conferencing services. IALR is a political subdivision of the Commonwealth of Virginia and has an affiliated 501(c)3, the IALR Foundation.

In an effort to inform efforts to increase social and economic opportunity in micropolitan statistical areas across the country, DRF has partnered with IALR, herein referred to as the Partners. It is understood that both parties shall exercise due care and prudence to avoid a Force Majeure Event. A Force Majeure Event shall not constitute a breach of contract. If either party is prevented, wholly or in part, from performing its obligations under this contract as a result of a Force Majeure Event, then that party shall immediately give notice to the other party of the Force Majeure Event and take reasonable steps to mitigate the impact of Force Majeure Event on contract performance. The waiver by IALR of a breach of any provision hereof shall not be taken or held to be a waiver of any succeeding breach of such provision or as a waiver of the provision itself.

DD. CONFIDENTIALITY: The firm acknowledges and agrees that it (and any other persons in its employment) must maintain the confidentiality of all IALR information, business affairs, programs, partners, vendors, finances, properties, intellectual property, trade secrets, methods of operation, computer programs, and documents, whether written, oral, or otherwise (hereinafter referred to as Confidential Information), to which it may come in contact with during or after the contract period.
